The Deep Proterozoic Crust in the North Atlantic Provinces Alex C. Tobi, Jacques L.R. Touret, 2012-12-06 The Proterozoic terrains of South Scandinavia and the Grenville Province in North America have many common features Regional high grade metamorphism Granulite facies anorthosites etc They are separated by the Caledonian orogeny and above all by the Atlantic Ocean During the time of the great continental drift controversy few people were ready to admit that both sides on the Atlantic were once an unique province Now everybody agrees on the Post paleozoic age of the Atlantic and consequently on the intrinsic homogeneity of the much older rocks which occur around it But a detailed comparison is not easy The Grenville Province is much larger than South Scandinavia both regions have been investigated by a great number of different schools using various methods approaches and concepts After several attempts and long discussion it was felt by a small group of individuals that literature study would not be enough and that nothing could replace the direct contact in the field of specialists who had a first hand knowledge of all involved regions The formula of a NATO Advanced Study Institute which gives a unique opportunity to meet and mix people of various origin and levels came almost by itself Much work was needed much help has been obtained as detailed in the Acknowledgements

Climate Development and History of the North Atlantic Realm Gerold Wefer, 2002-05-14 The global environment is changing rapidly under the impact of human activities An important element in this change is related to global climate modification Experts from the natural and social sciences with a strong interest in history discussed common topics of great interest to society Can the study of climate and history help in devising strategies for coping with this change What might be the type of information most useful in this context What are the pitfalls awaiting the unwary These and similar questions were discussed during a four day workshop The resulting proceedings contain comprehensive papers of broad interest thematic background papers and reports of study groups Apart from scientists the papers should interest graduate students and lecturers
