

THE SPORTS LAW PLAYBOOK

INITIAL LEGAL OVERVIEW OF SPORTS RIGHTS CENTRALIZATION

Marketing Rights

- Merchandising rights allow the logo or brand or name to be affixed to products such as T-shirts or caps and then sold.
- Sponsorship rights grant sponsors all kinds of communicative usage options to increase awareness and improve or sharpen the image.
- Advertising rights grant opportunities to advertise products/services for direct sales.

Media Rights

- These are the rights to market/broadcast a sporting event in the media, and also the right to produce the corresponding TV signal by a host broadcaster.
- A distinction is made between national / international media rights, live rights, subsequent exploitation rights, archive rights (for commercial licensing and film(-like) projects).

Event Rights

- This refers to the rights to hold an event (usually taking into account some specifications of the sports organization responsible for the event).
- This is a fundamental right, which, depending on the sport and contract, gives the beneficiary no or a very large degree of creative freedom.

Which rights to centralize?

Not all rights make sense for centralization. Focus first on which rights—media, marketing, event, or betting—can realistically be bundled (and potentially which subcategories of these). Consider contract terms, ownership, contract/rights dependencies, and existing obligations. Align with stakeholder interests and feasibility. Strategic selection is key.
