management process Working Capital will be set into a context of company crises to lead to the central object of investigation the Global Financial Crisis With a quantitative analysis via DataStream of the companies currently listed in the DAX MDAX and SDAX N 130 it will be examined if the credit crunch for companies in the Global Financial Crisis and the easy refunding possibilities afterwards due to the easy money policy of the European Central Bank had effects on the quality of the Working Capital Management The analysis of the data via SPSS will show that the possibilities of refunding indeed influence this quality whereby the intensity of the reactionary behaviour of the companies depends mainly on the object of cognition which is in this thesis examined by the parameters size age and industry sectors so that the results could serve as a basis for further management research

M&A Versus Alliances: The Impact of Partner-specific Alliance Experience on Governance Choice Julia Frehse, 2012-04 When companies decide upon a strategy to achieve and sustain growth they can choose between different options to reach this goal If external growth is chosen alliances and acquisitions are typically considered alternative governance structures that involve cooperative efforts on the inter organizational level Despite this similarity each of the two governance types has its own strengths and weaknesses alliances are based on contracts and offer the firm a substantial level of flexibility while acquisitions are ownership based and imply a higher degree of commitment but also control In the course of the governance decision tradeoffs have to be made between flexibility and control The challenge managers have to decide which of the two governance modes suits a specific situation best and will achieve superior results for the company Prior research shows that a company's history in inter organizational governance influences its future governance choices Firms that have cooperated in an alliance in the past make different governance choices than firms who lack this experience In general companies tend to choose governance modes they are already familiar with for future transactions In addition whether the partner firms know each other and have worked together before also influences the choice between alliances and acquisitions This book lays its focus on situations where companies have allied in the past and are now deciding upon the appropriate governance form for yet another cooperation Situations where no alliance experience exists and governance choices other than alliances and acquisitions are not considered here For academics as well as practitioners it is then of major interest to identify exactly how knowing the target firm from past alliances affects the decision between alliances and acquisitions However prior research on the influence of partner specific alliance experience on governance choice yields mixed results While it has been proven repeatedly that prior alliance experience with a partner influences the governance choice decision research has reached a dead end concerning the direction of this effect The purpose of this research is to contribute to the conversation concerning the effect of partner specific alliance experience on the choice between alliances and acquisitions and help to close the literature gap by investigating the exact circumstances under which each effects prevails Financial capacity market uncertainty and rivalry are chosen as promising moderating variables that are expected to interact with the effect of prior ties and foster the choice for an alliance or an acquisition in a particular situation

The grain banking model Anna Wolff,2010-04-06 Diploma Thesis from the year 2006 in the subject Economics Case Scenarios grade 1 3 European University Viadrina Frankfurt Oder Europa Universit t Viadrina Reims Management School language English abstract The rural sector in development countries is characterized by high covariant risk high client dispersion and lack of suitable collateral These problems lead to high information asymmetry within the agricultural lending process Because information is incomplete agricultural lending is costly Consequently many micro finance institutions MFIs have concentrated their branches and activities in urban areas Therefore scepticism is growing about their role in mobilising rural savings and offering rural lending services Financial cooperatives demanding compulsory savings and enforcing group lending schemes are able to reduce information asymmetry and hence transaction costs of agricultural lending Since the financial cooperative follows a minimalist approach it does not offer non financial services such as storage facilities training in farming techniques or the treatment of agricultural produce In order to enhance clients ability to utilize credit and thereby to improve their repayment rates an MFI should follow the integrated approach The MFI with an integrated approach offers credit combined with non financial services The grain bank is seen as a financial institution which links products and services of the financial cooperative with those of the integrated approach The grain bank replaces physical cash with grains and farm inputs Six main products are offered by the grain bank savings in grain input credit inventory credit household food security loan storage services and training services Further the grain bank provides access to input and output markets otherwise not available for the farmer The Ghanaian Centre for Agriculture and Rural Development CARD is such a grain bank The results show that CARD has a better financial sustainability than other Ghanaian MFIs not operating as a grain bank Although the study reveals that the outreach of CARD is not as encouraging as assumed the clients seem to be satisfied with the services received by CARD At the same time the results of the econometric analysis indicate that the provision of credit supplied by CARD increases farmer s output with potential effects on income
