The Implications of Climate Change for the Insurance Industry David Crichton, 2001 The Journal of Environment & Development ,1992 Global Environmental Law Annual ,2008 Global Environmental Change in Alpine Regions Karl W. Steininger, Hannelore Weck-Hannemann, 2002 Mountain regions represent about one fourth of the earth s surface area and provide a significant share of goods and services to humanity In this book the authors demonstrate how alpine environments throughout the world are particularly vulnerable to global environmental change Alpine populations will often be affected earliest and most significantly for example through extreme weather systems and their scope for adaptation is relatively limited Drawing on the natural and social sciences particularly economics this book supplies a broad picture of the diverse issues involved The authors show that observed changes in natural phenomena such as acidity and fish toxicity in high altitude lakes clearly support the thesis on ongoing global change induced by humans They then analyse the manifold socio economic impacts of global environmental change which are likely to be felt in various sectors and industries including tourism insurance and water cycle management It is shown that adaptation options though limited can be improved such as in natural hazard management Finally the authors evaluate the various mitigation options available for policymakers in agriculture energy production transport and land use planning Global Environmental Change in Alpine Regions demonstrates that although environmental change is a global phenomenon the impacts are distributed unevenly and vary in severity This book will be required reading for all students and scholars of environmental and resource economics public management and policy

The Global Politics of the Environment Lorraine M. Elliott, 1998 What kinds of international institutions are best suited to dealing with global environmental problems How can we address the crisis of state capacity What role should non state actors have in environmental governance Why are women and indigenous peoples still marginalized in global environmental politics What are the consequences of the global ecological crisis for economic and security policies The Global Politics of the Environment makes sense of the often seemingly irreconcilable ideas behind answers to these questions It focuses throughout on the tensions between mainstream strategies which seek to build support for reforms through existing institutions and radical critiques which argue that environmental degradation is a symptom of a dysfunctional world order that must itself be transformed if we are to meet the challenge of saving the planet
