

Gender Next, a study undertaken by the Advertising Standards Council of India (ASCI) and Future brands in 2021 looked at 600 ads across different categories and spoke to consumers across 10 cities. The study revealed that real women considered themselves more progressive than depictions in mainstream advertising.

The Gender Next study found that a majority of mainstream advertising continues to use harmful and non-aspirational portrayals of women. The study proposed the 'SEA' framework i.e. Self-esteem-empowered-Allied framework and the 3S screener (Subordination-Service-Standardization) for marketing and advertising professionals to understand the nuances of gender portrayal and as an inventory checklist for the review of scripts or films. This helps not only to identify implicit and regressive stereotypes but offers a model to help brands create advertising that is more compelling and powerful and effective in gaining more acceptability for them.

The Advertising Standards Council of India, and Kantar, a leading data, insights, and consulting firm, have collaborated to release a white paper (2021) that puts together data and insights making the business case for mainstreaming positive gender depictions. Kantar found that progressive portrayals of women result in advertising that is more effective. Indian advertisements that depicted progressive gender roles had a positive impact of as much as 32% in short-term product sales and improved a brand's equity by a whopping 51%. These results and insights prove that progressive depictions of women can drive engagement with brands in a major way, in the target market segment.

"Brands that have experimented with progressive portrayals of women have earned good volumes, positive brand scores and profits. True," said Harish Bijoor, founder at Harish Bijoor Consults, a reknowned Bangalore based consultancy firm. "But this is true only within their segmented buying audiences, within its carved out niche top of the pyramid audience. Downside is the fact that it may not work when the same message reaches a wider mass at the middle and bottom of the pyramid, which remains regressive in its intent towards women. Interestingly, it is not only women. Men, too, face similar stereotyping. In India, 74% female consumers and 70% male consumers believe that the way they are portrayed in advertising is completely out of touch with who they are."

In the last few years brands have slowly and steadily realised that advertisements have to take into cognizance changing attitudes of the consumer market towards gender equality (some of the advertisements have indeed broken the stereotypes depicting alternate views of the traditional man-woman roles in society) as new portrayals of women in advertisements have a positive effect on business for the brands.

Some examples of advertisements that have shown women and men in a different light may be analysed here to understand the evolving trends -

- 1. Ariel's "Share The Load" campaign (2016) showed a father introspecting his role at his house and deciding to help his wife with the laundry after watching his married daughter balancing work and household tasks alone. This campaign shows the desirability of the men in the household in sharing the work of laundry at home with the wife asking the question "Why is laundry only the mother's job?"
- 2. Havell's "Hawa Badlegi" advertisement (2013) depicted the husband taking up his wife's surname after marriage couple walks into a lady marriage registrar's office. When the registrar asks the woman to confirm if after the marriage she will be taking up the husband's surname, the man interrupts to say that it is him who will take up her surname post marriage.
- 3. Biba's "Change The Convention" campaign (2016) showcased the father questioning the cooking skills of his prospective son-in-law in the pre-marriage meeting with his family, with the latter inviting him for dinner after ten days allowing him some time to learn cooking.
- 4. Vim's Nazariya Badlo, Dekho Bartano Se Aage: Agency Mullen Lowe Lintas (2021) This ad told the story of a prospective matrimonial arrangement, where the 'independent guy' under the implicit assumption that it is the wife's job to cook and clean, tries to impress the girl by offering to 'help' her with cooking. The girl immediately offers to 'help' him with dishes, gently nudging him to be independent in household chores as well, as she could get late from work. The boy's initial shock and eventual change of perspective drives home the campaign message of 'Nazariya Badlo, Dekho Bartano Se Aage'. The girl in the ad is not only 'more than her chores' but also a change-maker who calls for equal partnership.
- 5. Saffola's Rakhna Heart ka Khayal | Agency: Mullen Lowe Lintas (2020) Moving away from the stereotypical gender role of a woman taking care of the husband and the family's health, Saffola's film reversed gender roles and visualised a modern couple where the
