

PART ONE
THE CONCEPT OF DELEGATION

CHAPTER I
PRELIMINARY NOTIONS

An examination of the nature of society not only indicates four essential elements, namely, members, the bond of union, the end and the means, but also distinctly points to the necessity of authority,¹ which, to say the least, is a conditio sine qua non for the existence of any society.² This principle of authority is the power of obligating the members of society, so that they may cooperate in the common goal.³ That the Church is possessed of such power is evidenced by the fact that it is constituted as a juridically perfect supernatural society,⁴ and as such has adequate power to attain its end. Consequently the Church has been endowed by Christ, not only with the power of orders,⁵ but also with the power of jurisdiction.⁶ This power of jurisdiction, as Ottaviani says, is that which the Church has for governing men, that is, for authoritatively directing their acts both with regard to faith and with regard to morals.⁷ The Code of Canon Law summarily expresses this same notion with the words "potestas regiminis."⁸

The Reception of Baptized Christians Dale J. Sieverding, 2001 The Forum Essays series is a cooperative effort of The North American Forum on the Catechumenate and Liturgy Training Publications The purpose of the series is to provide a forum for exploring issues emerging from the implementation of the order of Christian initiation They are a great resource for anyone involved in initiation ministry and especially for pastors and RCIA directors

Sacred Boundaries Keith P. Luria, 2005-08 Religious rivalry and persecution have bedeviled so many societies that confessional difference often seems an unavoidable source of conflict Sacred Boundaries challenges this assumption by examining relations between the Catholic majority and Protestant minority in seventeenth century France as a case study of two religious groups constructing confessional difference and coexistence

One Baptism—One Church? Kimberly Hope Belcher, Nathan P. Chase, Alexander T. Turpin, 2024-12-23 Mutual recognition of baptism has grounded ecumenical efforts but does contemporary Roman Catholic pastoral practice reflect these ecumenical theologies How do we understand the outer boundaries of the church On the one hand over the centuries Christians have recognized the baptism of those outside their own ecclesial body but on the other hand the practices of receiving those who are already baptized from other groups proclaim social theological and ecclesial distinctions How do contemporary practices reflect theological principles and historical development One Baptism One Church demonstrates ways that contemporary practice may be an obstacle to the full expression of our ecumenical commitments and how history can reshape that practice While the mutual recognition of baptism has grounded ecumenical efforts pastoral practice especially in local communities far away from the centers of power does not always reflect ecumenical theologies Contemporary Roman Catholic practice may seem at odds with the official understanding of baptized Christians as in real though imperfect communion by means of their participation in Christ Focusing on the Byzantine East and Roman West this book seeks to remove obstacles to the more complete expression and recognition of Christian unity and outlines concrete ways that our partial communion could be better expressed It concludes with practical reflections and recommendations for
