William Morris And Red House:

William Morris & Red House Jan Marsh, 2005-11-11 Red House occupies an extraordinary place in British architectural history. It was the first and only house that William Morris ever built. It was the first independent architectural commission from his friend Philip Webb. The challenge of furnishing the house inspired Morris to found the design firm of Morris & Co. It had a great influence on the Arts & Crafts Movement. But it is also a house that captured William Morris's heart. He was only twenty-five when in 1858 he decided to buy the site at Bexleyheath just outside London but in a rural Kentish setting. He had recently married Jane Burden, daughter of an Oxford ostler whose particular beauty became inspiration for so much Pre-Raphaelite art. With his young wife and his wealth, he planned to produce a vision of earthly paradise at Red House. Rossetti described it as more a poem than a house. Morris called it our place of art and when he was obliged to give it up for financial reasons in 1865 he resolved never to return. His biographer recorded that he could never set eyes on it again, confessing that the sight of it would be more than he could bear. Red House was saved from an uncertain future in January 2003 by the National Trust and has already opened its doors. Visitors will be able to see some of the original furnishings but many are now at Kelmscott Manor, the William Morris Gallery in Walthamstow, the Victoria & Albert Museum and other locations. This book however will provide both the story of Red House and a virtual tour to enable the reader to see how the house looked and functioned when William Morris, his family and friends lived there.

Red House Edward Hollamby, Philip Webb, 1991 The house documented here was designed for William Morris, the founder of the British Arts and Crafts movement, by his architect friend Philip Webb in 1858. Its design was heavily influenced by Morris and it is one of the earliest architectural expressions of the Arts and Crafts ideal.

William Morris and his Palace of Art Tessa Wild, 2018-11-30 William Morris and his Palace of Art is a comprehensive new study of Red House, Bexleyheath, the only house commissioned by William Morris and the first independent architectural work of his close friend Philip Webb. Morris moved in to Red House as an ebullient young man of 26 with an independent income and a head brimming with ideas and the persistent question of how best to live. Red House, together with its Pre-Raphaelite garden, stands as the physical embodiment of his exuberant spirit, youthful ambition, passionate medievalism, creativity and great sense of possibility. For five intense years from 1860-5 it was a place of halcyon days, happy family life, loyal friendship, good humoured competition and the jovial campaign of decorating, furnishing the house and designing the garden. Drawing on a wealth of new physical evidence, this book argues that Red House constitutes an ambitious and critical chapter in his design history. It will reconsider the inspiration it provided for the founding of the Firm of Morris, Marshall, Faulkner & Co, later Morris & Co, in 1861 and the vital collaboration of Webb, Burne Jones, Rossetti and their intimate circle in realising Morris's

"Biography, Identity and the Modern Interior" Penny Sparke, 2017-07-05

Through a series of case studies from the mid-eighteenth century to the start of the twenty-first, this collection of essays considers the historical insights that ethno-auto-biographical investigations into the lives of individuals, groups, and interiors can offer design and architectural historians. Established scholars and emerging researchers shed light on the methodological issues that arise from the use of these sources to explore the history of the interior as a site in which everyday life is experienced and performed, and the ways in which contemporary architects and interior designers draw on personal and collective histories in their practice. Historians and theorists working within a range of disciplinary contexts and historiographical traditions are turning to biography as a means of exploring and accounting for
