The Turks and Europe Gaston Gaillard, 2015-01-28 THE peoples who speak the various Turkish dialects and who bear the generic name of Turcomans or Turco Tatars are distributed over huge territories occupying nearly half of Asia and an important part of Eastern Europe But as we are only considering the Turkish question from the European point of view no lengthy reference is needed to such Eastern groups as those of Turkish or Mongol descent who are connected with the Yenisseians of Northern Asia and the Altaians The Russians call these peoples Tatars and they no doubt constituted the Tubbat nation referred to by the Chinese historians under the name of Tou Kiou up to the seventh century after Christ These very brief facts show the importance of the race and are also sufficient to emphasise the point that these people are akin to those Turks of Western Asia who are more closely connected with the Europeans The Western Turkish group includes the Tmauncsoof Persia and Russian or Afghan Turkistan the Azarbaijanians who are probably Turkisised Iranians living between the Caucasus Mountains and Persia and lastly the Osmanli Turks who are subjects of the Sultan speak the Turkish language and profess Islam Close to this group but farther to the East the central group also concerns us for some of its representatives who now inhabit the boundaries of Europe made repeated incursions into Europe in various directions In the plains lying between the River Irtish and the Caspian Sea live the Kirghiz Kazaks and in the Tien Shien Mountains the Kara Kirghiz who have preserved many ancient Old

Turkish customs and seem to have been only slightly Mohammedanised The Usbeks and the Sartis of Russian Turkistan on the other hand have been more or less Iranised Finally on the banks of the Volga are to be found the Tatars of European Russia Among them the Tatars of Kazan who are descended from the Kiptchaks came to the banks of the Volga in the thirteenth century and mingled with the Bulgars These Tatars differ from the Tatars of Astrakhan who are descendants of the Turco Mongols of the Golden Horde and are connected with the Khazars and from the Nogais of the Crimea who are Tatars of the steppes who more or less intermarried with other races the Tatars of the Tauris coast being the hybrid descendants of the Adriatic race and the Indo Afghan race They are to be found near Astrakhan and in the Caucasus Mountains and even perhaps as far as Lithuania where though still being Mohammedans they have adopted the language and costume of the Poles

The Turks and Europe Gaston Gaillard, 2021-05-19 In The Turks and Europe Gaston Gaillard embarks on a meticulous exploration of the intricate historical and cultural interactions between Turkey and Europe delving into the complexities of identity politics and migration Gaillard's literary style is characterized by a scholarly yet accessible prose that deftly weaves together historical narratives sociopolitical analysis and cultural critique The book situates itself within the broader context of post colonial studies European history and cross cultural dialogue ultimately providing a nuanced examination of how shifting perceptions of Turkish identity have influenced and been influenced by European attitudes from the Ottoman Empire to contemporary times Gaston Gaillard a prominent historian and cultural theorist draws from a rich academic background that informs his interest in intercultural relations His experiences in both Turkey and Europe along with extensive research in Ottoman history and modern European studies provide Gaillard with a unique perspective His commitment to understanding the dynamics of cultural intersection is rooted in a belief that exploring these connections is essential to addressing contemporary issues rooted in historical context This book is highly recommended for scholars students and general readers alike who are interested in the evolving relationship between Turkey and Europe Gaillard's insightful analysis not only illuminates historical realities but also provokes thoughtful reflection on identity and belonging in an increasingly globalized world
