Structure Of College Choice:

The Structure of College Choice Robert Zemsky, Penney Oedel, 1983 Choosing Colleges Patricia M. McDonough, 1997-01-01 Examines the everyday experiences of high school seniors as they choose their colleges and demonstrates that college choice is a more complex social and organizational reality than has been previously understood

The Perceptual Structure of College Choice Randall G. Chapman, 1991 College Choice in America Charles F. Manski, David A. Wise, 2013-10-01 Using the data from the National Longitudinal Study of the Class of 1972 the authors present a set of interrelated analyses of student and institutional behavior each focused on a particular aspect of the process of choosing and being chosen by a college The SAGE Handbook for Research in Education Clifton F. Conrad, Ronald C. Serlin, 2006 Research is increasingly becoming more influential in the field of education and this Handbook brings together a range of top academic experts who represent diverse fields within and outside of education as well as quantitative qualitative and mixed method approaches to provide an upto date advanced analysis of all relevant issues involved in educational research The Handbook is written in lively welcoming prose and central to the handbook is an intention to encourage and help researchers place ideas at the epicenter of inquiry In addition explicit discussion of the fundamental challenges that researchers must consciously address throughout their inquiry are identified and solutions provided to help future researchers overcome similar obstacles Resources in Education ,1992-04 College Choice Interrupted Or Facilitated Tangela Blakely Reavis, 2017 Although college enrollment rates have expanded over the last several decades low income students and students of color continue to face formidable barriers as they seek entry into higher education While the existence of these barriers are often viewed as macro level roadblocks that are largely systemic much of the literature around access to higher education continues to use comprehensive college choice models as a way to explain how students as individuals come to arrive at a particular decision about whether and where to enroll in postsecondary education Hossler Hossler Smith Vesper 1999 These models are only partially useful in examining the college decision making process because they assume that all students have access to the same information Underrepresented students bring with them experiences that are situated in their family school community and cultural contexts This study unpacks the complexity of the college choice process by situating one s family background and school context in the broader system of social inequality Bergerson 2010 This longitudinal qualitative multi site case study presents narratives of eight high school students attending two high schools in one urban school district Participants were followed for four years where they described their college aspirations actions and decisions from the ninth grade until the end of their senior year in grade twelve Pierre Bourdieu s social reproduction theory 1979 1984 was used as a theoretical framework to investigate how family background and school selectivity shaped students college aspirations and choice The findings offer two contrasting pathways relative to the college choice process The first pathway to college was interrupted in some way by the students school family community or a lack of support In the second pathway college choice was a relatively uninterrupted decision about where to attend college rather than if they should attend Findings call for a reframing of college choice by introducing college social conditioning a new lens which places one's structural environment at the center of decision making Implications suggest the need for more intentional interventions and strategies that are aimed at challenging institutions especially larger systemic barriers of social inequality
