

Pharmacokinetics of Insulin 7

Insulin is a water-soluble protein hormone. It is secreted by the beta cells of the pancreas. It acts on target tissues to regulate glucose metabolism. The pharmacokinetics of insulin are characterized by its short half-life and rapid action.

The half-life of insulin in the blood is approximately 5-10 minutes. This is due to its high clearance by the liver and kidneys. The onset of action is rapid, occurring within minutes of subcutaneous injection. The duration of action varies depending on the formulation, ranging from a few hours for regular insulin to several days for long-acting insulin analogs.

Insulin is primarily metabolized in the liver. The liver accounts for approximately 60-70% of the total clearance of insulin. The remaining clearance occurs in the kidneys. The pharmacokinetics of insulin are also influenced by factors such as the route of administration, the formulation, and the patient's metabolic state.

The pharmacokinetics of insulin are also influenced by the patient's metabolic state. In the presence of hyperglycemia, the clearance of insulin is increased, leading to a shorter half-life. Conversely, in the presence of hypoglycemia, the clearance of insulin is decreased, leading to a longer half-life.
