

The background of the title card is a dark, atmospheric scene. At the top, there are silhouettes of several people standing on a balcony or ledge against a bright, reddish-pink sky. The overall color palette is dominated by dark blues, purples, and reds, creating a mysterious and dramatic mood.

The Missing Anthropoid:

The Missing Anthropoid Abe Sinaid, 2004-09-01 There are many chasms between east and west between science and belief rich and poor but also many bridges across these chasms The Missing Anthropoid shows some of these chasms and bridges and the horror that often lurks just below the surface With Middle East milieu The Missing Anthropoid is written from the inside not by a tourist or a politician I came to the United States from the Middle East in my early twenties married an American girl and settled here I started work as a truck helper then machinist and finally training and racing harness horses School had to wait until nighttime

The Secret Doctrine: Anthropogenesis Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, 1902 Selected Works of Ernst Heinrich Philipp August Haeckel Ernst

Heinrich Philipp August Haeckel, 1834-01-01 The intellectual movement to which the impulse was given thirteen years ago by the English naturalist Charles Darwin in his celebrated work On the Origin of Species has within this short period assumed dimensions which cannot but excite the most universal interest It is true the scientific theory set forth in that work which is commonly called briefly Darwinism is only a small fragment of a far more comprehensive doctrine a part of the universal Theory of Development which embraces in its vast range the whole domain of human knowledge But the manner in which Darwin has firmly established the latter by the former is so convincing and the direction which has been given by the unavoidable conclusions of that theory to all our views of the universe must appear to every thinking man of such deep significance that its general importance cannot be over estimated There is no doubt that this immense extension of our intellectual horizon must be looked upon as by far the most important and rich in results among all the numerous and grand advances which natural science has made in our day When our century with justice is called the age of natural science when we look with pride upon the immensely important progress made in all its branches we are generally in the habit of thinking more of immediate practical results and less of the extension of our general knowledge of nature We call to mind the complete reform so infinitely rich in consequences to human intercourse which has been effected by the development of machinery by railways steamships telegraphs and other inventions of physics Or we think of the enormous influence which chemistry has brought to bear upon medicine agriculture and upon all arts and trades But much as we may value this influence of modern science upon practical life still it must be estimated from a higher and more general point of view stand most assuredly below the enormous influence which the theoretical progress of modern science will have on the entire range of human knowledge on our conception of the universe and on the perfecting of man's culture Think of the immense revolutions in all our theoretical views which we owe to the general application of the microscope Think of the cell theory which explains the apparent unity of the human organism as the combined result of the union of a mass of elementary vital units Or consider the immense extension of our theoretical horizon which we owe to spectral analysis and to the mechanical theory of heat But among all these wonderful theoretical advances the theory wrought out by Darwin occupies by far the highest rank Every one of my readers has heard of the name of Darwin But most persons have probably only an imperfect idea of the real value of his theory If a reader estimates as of equal value all that has been written upon Darwin's memorable work since its appearance the value of the theory will appear very doubtful to him supposing that he has not been engaged in the organic natural sciences and has not penetrated into the inner secrets of zoology and botany The criticisms of it are so full of contradictions and for the most part so defective that we ought not to be at all astonished that even now after the lapse of thirteen years since the appearance of Darwin's work it has not gained half that importance which is justly due to it and which sooner or later it certainly will attain Most of the innumerable writings which have been published during these years both for and against Darwinism are the productions of persons who are entirely wanting in the necessary amount of biological and especially of zoological knowledge Although almost all of the more celebrated naturalists of the present day are adherents of the theory yet only a few of them have endeavoured to procure its acceptance and recognition in larger circles Hence the odd contradictions and the strange opinions which may still be heard everywhere about Darwinism This is the reason which induces me to make Darwin s theory and those further doctrines which are connected with it the subject of these pages which I hope will be generally intelligible I hold it to be the duty of naturalists not merely to meditate upon improvements and discoveries in the narrow circle to which their speciality confines them not merely to pore over their one study with love and care but also to seek to make the important general results of it fruitful to the mass and to assist in spreading the knowledge of physical science among the people The highest triumph of the human mind the true knowledge of the most general laws of nature ought not to remain the private possession of a privileged class of savans but ought to become the common property of all mankind The theory which through Darwin has been placed at the head of all our knowledge of nature is usually called the Doctrine of Filiation or the Theory of Descent Others term it the Transmutation Theory Both designations are correct For this doctrine affirms that all organisms viz all species of animals all species of plants which have ever existed or still exist on the earth are derived from one single or from a few simple original forms and that they have developed themselves from these in the natural course of a gradual change Although this theory of development had already been brought forward and defended by several great naturalists and especially by Lamarck and Goethe in the beginning of our century still it was through Darwin thirteen years ago that it received its complete demonstration and causal foundation and this is the reason why now it is commonly and exclusively though not quite correctly designated as Darwin s Theory The great and really inestimable value of the Theory of Descent appears in a different light accordingly as we merely consider its more immediate connection with organic natural science or its larger influence upon the whole range of man s knowledge of the universe Organic natural science or Biology which as Zoology treats of animals as Botany of plants is completely reformed and founded anew by the Theory of Descent For by this theory we are made acquainted with the active causes of organic forms while up to the present time Zoology and Botany have simply been occupied with the facts of these forms We may therefore also term the theory of descent a mechanical explanation of organic forms or the science of the true causes of Organic Nature
