not written to entertain you I have written to disturb you To hold up a mirror to the times we live in and to remind you of the humanity we keep forgetting to practice The century has given us wonders speed technology progress But beneath the surface it has also given us chaos division and loneliness We scroll past suffering as if it is background noise We hide behind masks afraid of being seen We carry scars as if they are ornaments and we rename our wounds to make them sound beautiful This book is not meant to be consumed in one sitting It is meant to be wrestled with returned to carried like a stone in your pocket Each chapter is a lesson not the kind you memorize but the kind you feel scratching at your chest You may not agree with every word You may resist some of the reflections But if at any point you pause if at any point you recognize yourself then this book has done its work I call it No Use Lessons to Be Lodged because that is how it feels sometimes as if speaking about compassion truth and conscience in our age has no use at all But perhaps the real work of a lesson is not to fix the world overnight Perhaps its task is simpler to stay lodged in us to whisper when the noise grows too loud to remind us in the quietest way possible that we are still human So enter these pages not as a reader of words but as a witness of echoes And may the echoes refuse to leave you untouched
