Interest in the problems of underdeveloped economies has increased since the early 1950s and is now a primary topic in university courses. When this book was originally published it reflected a sense among some economists that current orthodox economic theory is inadequate in this field. The volume includes leading American and non-American economists. The discussion of the content of courses was in the nature of things an extension of the discussion on the state of knowledge and reflects the period immediately prior to initial publication. Some of the issues continue to be debated including the balance of instruction between macro and micro economics, the place of mathematics and econometrics, the question of the desirability of linking the study of economics with studies in administration, languages, political science, sociology, or even engineering. Development economics is now an established subject in the teaching curricula of most universities. The attention of the volume is focused on the problems of creating courses of study in subjects relevant to development within some framework specially designed for the purpose. The problems of organizing such courses concerned the length of courses, the type of students to which they would cater, the qualifications and standards required for admission and successful completion of courses, and so on. The balance of instruction between macro and micro economics, the place of mathematics and econometrics, the question of the desirability of linking the study of economics with studies in administration, languages, in connection with area studies, political science, sociology, or even engineering, the merits of methods like case studies, workshops, and training in field work are all discussed.

Rethinking Development Economics Ha-Joon Chang, 2003

Impressive provides a very good compendium of what are usually classified as heterodox development economics, an excellent volume. Journal of International Development. This important new collection tackles the failure of neoliberal reform to generate longterm growth and reduce poverty in many developing and transition economies. As dramatically demonstrated in the collapse of the WTO's Seattle talks, there is increasing dissatisfaction in both developing and developed countries with the emerging neoliberal global economic order. The resignations of Joseph Stiglitz and Ravi Kanbur from the World Bank emphasize that this disillusionment with the orthodoxy now exists at the very heart of the establishment. Yet the increasing demand for an alternative to this orthodoxy is not being met. Over the last few decades the older generation of development economists have been edged out of most major universities, particularly in the USA. The situation in most developing countries is even worse, although there is more demand for alternatives to orthodox development economics; these countries have even less capability to generate such alternatives. Rethinking Development Economics is intended to fill this gap. It addresses key issues in development economics ranging from macroeconomics, finance, and governance to trade, industry, agriculture, and poverty. Bringing together some of the foremost names in the field, this
