New Ways to Approach These Niggling Challenges in the Office

Distracted & scattered

PRACTICE

Learn a practice where you follow a simple object (like your breath). The repeated returning to a focal point trains your attention.

BENEFIT

Focus. Your attention wavers less and you're not as easily pulled away by external distractions or internal chatter.

Annoyed by difficult colleagues, office politics, gossip

PRACTICE

Let others talk about themselves. Listen and consider what might cause them pain.

BENEFIT

Not as judgmental. You take more time to explore what might be causing other people pain and problems instead of assuming the worst.

Physically worn down by too much tension, rushing through meals, staring at screens

PRACTICE

Take a few minutes and let your attention scan your whole body from toe to head. Go breathe fresh air.

BENEFIT

Body awareness. You more often notice how you actually feel in your body and when it needs care.

Stuck: solution to a problem keeps evading you

PRACTICE

Sit quietly doing nothing for five minutes. Then as you contemplate the problem, imagine you're seeing it for the first time.

BENEFIT

Fresh eyes. Increased ability to let go of assumptions, expectations, and storylines and see things anew.

Frustrated with lack of progress in yourself or others

PRACTICE

Listen fully to a longer piece of music without doing anything else at all. This helps you appreciate rhythm, rather than trying to force things.

BENEFIT

Patience. You let things develop in their own time rather than always trying to push them.
