State Buildings Governance:

State-Building Aidan Hehir, Neil Robinson, 2007-03-06 This study brings together internationally renowned academics to provide a detailed insight into the theory and practice of state building. State building is one of the dominant themes in contemporary international relations. This text addresses both the theoretical logic behind state building and key practical manifestations of this phenomenon. Unlike how-to manuals that seek to identify best practice, this book interrogates the normative assumptions inherent in this practice and the manner in which state building impacts on contemporary international relations. The logic of state building is explored and analyzed, providing insight into the historical context that catalyzed this process, the relationship between international law and the practice of international administration, and the political ramifications and implications of external governance. Case studies on Bosnia, Kosovo, and East Timor provide practical examples of key contradictions within the state building process, highlighting the lack of accountability, democracy, and vision manifest in these operations. Offering a coherent critical analysis of an increasingly important international issue, State Building will appeal to students and scholars of international relations, comparative politics, and political theory.

Armed State Building Paul D. Miller, 2013-08-15 Since 1898 the United States and the United Nations have deployed military force more than three dozen times in attempts to rebuild failed states. Currently, there are more state building campaigns in progress than at any time in the past century, including Afghanistan, Bosnia, Kosovo, the Democratic Republic of Congo, Haiti, Sudan, Liberia, Cote d'Ivoire, and Lebanon, and the number of candidate nations for such campaigns in the future is substantial. Even with a broad definition of success, earlier campaigns failed more than half the time. In this book, Paul D. Miller brings his decade in the U.S. military intelligence community and policy worlds to bear on the question of what causes armed international state building campaigns by liberal powers to succeed or fail. The United States successfully rebuilt the West German and Japanese states after World War II but failed to build a functioning state in South Vietnam. After the Cold War, the United Nations oversaw relatively successful campaigns to restore order, hold elections, and organize post-conflict reconstruction in Mozambique, Namibia, Nicaragua, and elsewhere, but those successes were overshadowed by catastrophes in Angola, Liberia, and Somalia. The recent effort in Iraq and the ongoing one in Afghanistan, where Miller had firsthand military intelligence and policymaking experience, are yielding mixed results despite the high levels of resources dedicated and the long duration of the missions there. Miller outlines different types of state failure, analyzes various levels of intervention that liberal states have tried in the state building process, and distinguishes among the various failures and successes; those efforts have provoked United States Government Organization Manual, 1960 Political Ecology of Everyday
