offers a comprehensive overview of restrictions on the right to strike at international and national levels and provides an insight into the different approaches in the legal systems. The contributors of the volume are all experts in the field of labour law who are intimately familiar with the subject matter. This volume examines the law of the International Labour Organization, the European Convention on Human Rights and the European Social Charter within the framework of the Council of Europe and various national legal systems in Europe. Particular attention is paid to the question of the right to strike in the important area of essential services. As the right to strike and its limits are generally of great interest at international and national levels and as legal developments in this area have recently accelerated in many places, this highly topical book is recommended not only to labour law scholars but also to political decision makers, representatives of the social partners and practitioners.

The present volume is an outcome of the proceedings of the World Congress of the International Society for Labour and Social Security Law which took place in Santiago Chile in September 2012. The country reports submitted at that time have been modified and updated and more country reports have been added. Each chapter covers the following specific topics: legal definitions, the legal basis of the right to strike, the right to call a strike, the right to participate in a strike, lawful strikes according to their purpose, procedural requirements, peace obligations, other limitations to strikes, the public sector and essential services, specific emanations of strikes and other forms of industrial action, legal consequences of lawful strikes, legal consequences of unlawful strikes, dispute resolution, support of strikers, parity of parties and neutrality of the state and strikes in practice.
