Three Years In Tibet:

Three Years in Tibet Ekai Kawaguchi, 2016-09-28 I was lately reading the Holy Text of the Sa harma Pu dar ka the Aphorisms of the White Lotus of the Wonderful or True Law in a Samsk manuscript under a Bo hi tree near M ga va S ran h Benares Here our Blessed Lord Bu ha Sh kya Muni taught His Holy harma just after the accomplishment of His Bu hahood at Bu hagay Whilst doing so I was reminded of the time eighteen years ago when I had read the same text in Chinese at a great Monastery named Ohbakusang at Kyoto in Japan a reading which determined me to undertake a visit to Tibet It was in March 1891 that I gave up the Rectorship of the Monastery of Gohyakurakan in Tokyo and left for Kyoto where I remained living as a hermit for about three years totally absorbed in the study of a large collection of Bu hist books in the Chinese language My object in doing so was to fulfil a long felt desire to translate the texts into Japanese in an easy style from the difficult and unintelligible Chinese But I afterwards found that it was not a wise thing to rely upon the Chinese texts alone without comparing them with Tibetan translations as well as with the original Samsk texts which are contained in Mah y na Bu hism The Bu hist Samsk texts were to be found in Tibet and Nep l Of course many of them had been discovered by European Orientalists in Nep l and a few in other parts of India and Japan But those texts had not yet been found which included the most important manuscripts of which Bu hist scholars were in great want Then again the Tibetan texts were famous for being vi more accurate translations than the Chinese Now I do not say that the Tibetan translations are superior to the Chinese As literal translations I think that they are superior but for their general meaning the Chinese are far better than the Tibetan
