Women In The Field:

Women in the Field Peggy Golde, 1986-07-28 What is it like to be an anthropologist or more specifically a woman anthropologist Here we see highly trained and qualified women anthropologists examining their own efforts to live and work in alien cultures in many parts of the world New chapters have been added to this ground breaking volume and each contributor is in one way or another a pioneer All have chosen to devote their lives and energies to the understanding of worlds not their own All have felt it important to explain what they do why they do it and how they feel about their work Cultures vary widely in their perception of a woman engaged in anthropological field work Each of these women has had to deal with the influence of her gender as well as the subject of her study on the mechanics of establishing a living working relationship with people of another culture The diversity of their responses to the presence of a foreign woman at work in their midst gives the book an invaluable cross cultural perspective as does the great variety of reactions and strategies on the part of the authors themselves Besides providing rare insight into field work in general Women in the Field mirrors the difficulties and delights of any person thrust into an unfamiliar culture

Women in the Field Marcia Bonta, 1991 Men generally dominated the study of the outdoors in the late eighteenth through the early twentieth centuries But there were women in the field too Marcia Myers Bonta gives biographies of twenty five of these women naturalists in this well detailed study Bonta divides the women by the subject of their study naturalists botanists entomologists ornithologists and ecologists She also describes a group of women that she considers pioneers showing them in all their individuality as field persons as professionals and as friends with others in their field A handful were recognized experts Agnes Chase was considered the best agrostologist in the world Alice Eastwood was made honorary president of the seventh International Botanical Congress in Sweden Elizabeth Gertrude Knight Britton was called the mother of bryology In the 1950s conservationist Rachel Carson became a well known voice in the fight against pesticides and in 1962 she published Silent Spring a chilling account of the effects of pesticides on people wildlife and the environment Others were less well known Jane Colden did botanical work and drawing in the 1740s and 1750s with the support of her father Martha Maxwell developed a new method of taxidermy in the 1860s displaying animals in their habitat Kate Brandegee of California hid her identity from the established botanical community in the East for many years knowing they would look down on dissenting work done not only in the West but by a woman This book provides insight and information about the history of American nature study as well as women s roles in the natural sciences
