World Development Report 1994 Alec Baron,1994-09-01 World Development Report 1994 ,1994 World Development Report 1994 examines the link between infrastructure and development and explores ways in which developing countries can improve both the provision and the quality of infrastructure services In recent decades developing countries have made substantial investments in infrastructure achieving dramatic gains for households and producers by expanding their access to services such as safe water sanitation electric power telecommunications and transport Even more infrastructure investment and expansion are needed in order to extend the reach of services especially to people living in rural areas and to the poor But as this report shows the quantity of investment cannot be the exclusive focus of policy Improving the quality of infrastructure service also is vital Both quantity and quality improvements are essential to modernize and diversify production help countries compete internationally and accommodate rapid urbanization The report identifies the basic cause of poor past performance as inadequate institutional incentives for improving the provision of infrastructure To promote more efficient and responsive service delivery incentives need to be changed through commercial management competition and user involvement Several trends are helping to improve the performance of infrastructure First innovation in technology and in the regulatory management of markets makes more diversity possible in the supply of services Second an evaluation of the role of government is leading to a shift from direct government provision of services to increasing private sector provision and recent experience in many countries with public private partnerships is highlighting new ways to increase efficiency and expand services Third increased concern about social and environmental sustainability has heightened public interest in infrastructure design and performance World Development Report 1994 World Bank,1994 This eighteenth annual World Development Report assesses what a more market driven and intergrated world means for workers It asks which development strategies best address worker s needs and what domestic labor market policies can do to establish a more equitable distribution of income greater job security and higher workplace standards while preserving and indeed enhancing the efficiency of labor markets Informe sobre el desarrollo mundial 1994 World Bank,1994 This seventeenth edition of the World Development Report focuses on services that are essential for households business and governments to function transport telecommunications water and sanitation power and gas and major water works Quantity vs Quality Infrastructure is one of the areas in which government policy and finance have an important role to play because of its pervasive impact on economic development and human welfare World Development Report 1994 presents new strategies for developing infrastructure in more effective less wasteful ways The Report shows that the quantity of investment cannot be the exclusive focus of policy It is also vital that the quality of infrastructure service be improved Readers are provided with a review of developing countries experience with infrastructure development and an assessment of its current state The Report asserts that the time is ripe for change It considers new ways of meeting public needs for services from infrastructure ways that are more efficient more user responsive more environmentally friendly and more resourceful in using both the public and private sectors Changing the incentives To promote more efficient and responsive delivery of infrastructure services the Report points to the need to change incentives through the application of three instruments commercial management competition and stakeholder involvement The Report also identifies trends that will facilitate improvements in the performance of infrastructure These include innovation in technology and regulatory management the new willingness of governments to involve the private sector and increased concern about social and environmental sustainability Benefits from improved performance would unquestionably be large Approximately 200 billion is invested in the sector annually in the developing world and the savings that would accrue from better provision and performance would be substantial
