Teaching Conversation To Children With Autism Scripts And Script Fading:

Teaching Conversation to Children with Autism Lynn E. McClannahan, Patricia J. Krantz, 2005 Scripting is a teaching method designed to help children and adults with autism spectrum disorders ASDs who are nonverbal or who are verbal but don't initiate conversation to initiate conversation. The authors draw on years of experience using scripts in their own clinic and include many case studies that show how scripts have worked. The book defines scripts as an audiotape or written word phrase or sentence that enables young people with autism to use speech to start and continue conversations. At first a child is taught to play the recording of a word for an adult and then get a reaction from the adult e.g. if he plays the script juice the adult will give him a sip of juice or if he plays the script ball the adult will play ball with him. Later on the child is taught to play the script and then say the word himself and get the reward from the adult. As the child becomes better at talking scripts are lengthened to become phrases want juice or play ball and then sentences. And once the child can read scripts are written instead of recorded. As the child masters sets of scripts the adult begins to diminish fade the prompts. If the script was recorded words are gradually deleted from the recording e.g. if the script started out saying Where is mom they will re-record it so it just says Where is and then Where. At this point the child should fill in the blanks. Teaching Conversation to Child with Autism Lynn E. McClannahan, Patricia J. Krantz, 2005 For parents and professionals this book describes a proven method to help children with autism initiate and sustain conversation through the use of written and audiotaped scripts.

Using Script-Fading Procedures to Teach Children with Autism to Initiate During Free Play Kara Anne Reagon,2012 Children with autism often display deficits in social interaction communication and play Unlike typical peers during free play with a variety of games and toys they often do not initiate to others or engage in interactive game play for sustained periods of time Previous research has demonstrated the effectiveness of script fading procedures in increasing initiations and conversational repertoires for children with autism However these procedures were examined in arranged environments using an activity schedule or in structured settings In addition the role of the conversation partner has not been studied The use of activity schedules has also been effective in increasing independence and decreasing adult prompts In particular the use of a joint activity schedule increased independent game play between preschoolers with autism Therefore the current study investigated a the use of script fading procedures and the use of manual guidance to teach four preschool children to initiate game play during free play without the aide of an activity schedule Second the study examined the effects of scripts and script fading procedures on b the frequency of interactions c the conversation partner s interactions on participants interactions d generalization across stimuli and people e maintenance and f independent free play Results demonstrated participants play initiations engagement number of games played and frequency of interactions increased skills generalized across games and peers and maintained Furthermore the number of prompts decreased indicating script fading procedures with manual guidance alone may be effective in increasing independent free play and initiations
