Students Right To Know:

Is Student-Right-to-Know All You Should Know? Thomas Bailey, Juan Carlos Calcagno, Davis Jenkins, Timothy Leinbach, Gregory Kienzl, 2005 Over the last decade policymakers educators and researchers have increasingly sought to understand community college policies and practices that promote students success This effort has been partly driven by an increased emphasis on outcome accountability but it has also promoted a productive discussion about improving institutional performance The research reported here has two related goals One goal is to work towards strengthening the ability to assess and compare institutional performance We thus have developed a model that can be used to adjust simple graduation rates for institutional characteristics such as student composition college resources size and location all of which might influence those rates Our long term goal is to understand how to improve student outcomes so the paper also uses the model to measure the effect of those institutional characteristics on graduation rates We use data from the Integrated Postsecondary Education Data System IPEDS surveys applying a weighted least squares procedure for grouped data to estimate an institutional completion rates model This analysis confirms several hypotheses about institutional determinants of graduation rates at community colleges Our results indicate a consistent negative relationship between enrollment size and completion Additionally colleges with high shares of minority students part time students and women have lower graduation rates A final significant finding among institutional characteristics is that greater instructional expenditures are related to a greater likelihood of graduation The method developed here can be used to better assess the performance of community colleges Contains 1 figure and 3 tables
