Transnational Tortillas Carolina Bank Muñoz, 2016-05-02 This book looks at the flip side of globalization How does a company from the Global South behave differently when it also produces in the Global North A Mexican tortilla company Tortimundo has two production facilities within a hundred miles of each other but on different sides of the U S Mexico border The workers at the two factories produce the same product with the same technology but have significantly different work realities This global factory gives Carolina Bank Mu oz an ideal opportunity to reveal how management regimes and company policy on each side of the border apply different strategies to exploit their respective workforces vulnerabilities The author s in depth ethnographic fieldwork shows that the U S factory is characterized by an immigration regime and the Mexican factory by a gender regime In the California factory managers use state policy and laws related to immigration status to pit documented and undocumented workers against each other Undocumented workers are subject to harsher punishment night shift work and lower pay In the Baja California factory managers sexually harass women who make up most of the workforce and create divisions between light and dark skinned women forcing them to compete for managerial attention which they understand equates with job security In describing and analyzing the differences in working conditions between the two plants Bank Mu oz provides important new insights into how in a globalized economy managerial strategies for labor control are determined by the interaction of state policies and labor market conditions with race gender and class at the point of production
