outcomes and future challenges of dating abuse in adolescents focusing on the recent studies and examining prevalence risk and protective factors and consequences of DV Chapter two addresses a research involving quantitative and qualitative complementary studies with participants involved in same sex relationships aiming to give a more complete portrait of another aspect involved in the dating violence problem The third chapter discusses the psychological traits of the adolescents perpetrating dating violence in order to identify the problematic characteristics that are related to the abuse and provide the most accurate intervention in terms of prevention Chapter four introduces the problematic use of digital tools explaining how they can foster abuse in the context of dating relationships focusing on the prevalence and impacts of this emergent important phenomenon Chapter five discusses sexting an emerging phenomenon in dating relationships associated with new psychosocial and digital risks This new form of online sexual violence may increase the vulnerability of adolescent at a crucial stage in their sexual affective development Accordingly the practices of sexting and its meaning in the dating relationship are characterized Cyberbullying is another abusive typology that has been related to DDA which is given special focus and attention in chapter six Finally the last chapter intends to review evidence based DDA intervention and prevention considering the different variables related to them specifically the sociodemographic risk and protective factors

Violence and Abuse in Intimate Dating Relationships Morven Macnab, 2010 ABSTRACTS

Since the issue of dating violence emerged onto the research agenda in the 1980s researchers have focused upon measuring the prevalence of physical violence occurring in young people s intimate relationships using quantitative methods Surveys which have limited young people s reporting to stating whether or not they have perpetrated or sustained any of a fixed range of predetermined violent acts have formed the dominant methodological approach In the main dating violence studies have focused on researching university students in the United States of America and young people not attending American universities are an under researched population in the dating violence literature The dearth of qualitative approaches to past studies of dating violence has meant that young people s own accounts of their experiences attitudes and perceptions of dating violence and abuse have been afforded minimal focus Feminist theoretical approaches to dating violence research are now emerging contributing a valuable gendered analysis of the issues Through qualitative interviews with forty five young people aged 16 21 23 men and 22 women recruited primarily from a Further Education college and an organisation working with young people not in education employment or training this thesis explores young people s attitudes perceptions and experiences of violence and abuse in intimate dating relationships through a feminist theoretical lens The study is couched in a rich body of feminist empirical and theoretical literature which conceptualises intimate partner violence as primarily an issue of men s violence against women perpetrated with the rationale of maintaining power and control The impact that popular theoretical discourses of gender equality and female empowerment may have upon young people s capacity to acknowledge ongoing gender inequalities is also considered in this thesis The findings of the current research indicate that young people s dating relationships and experiences of heterosexuality in general reflect ongoing gender inequalities which are influenced to a great extent by patriarchal modes of power and control. The accounts of young men and women in this study established dating relationships as sites of imbalanced gender power with many modes of men's power control, surveillance and monitoring of their girlfriends described as normal and acceptable. There was a widespread perception among the participants that dating violence is an issue of mutual combat where women are just as likely as men to be perpetrators even though their experiences of dating violence largely reflected the pattern of female victims and male perpetrators. In regard to violence against women by men, many of the participants perceived men's violence to be understandable in the face of women's provocation, particularly in cases where women are perceived to be cheating. For a significant minority of young people, intimate relationships are sites of violence and abuse with women disproportionately the victims. The findings from this study indicate a lack of awareness of the avenues of support that can be accessed by young people experiencing dating violence and abuse. The findings also highlight a requirement for direct educative strategies to challenge some young people's support for men's violence against women.

Factors Contributing to Violence in Dating Relationships Beth C. Emery, 1983

Until recently, the study of premarital abuse has received relatively little attention from researchers. Those studies which have been concerned with this phenomenon reveal that approximately 22% of their college samples reported involvement in abusive dating relationships, indicating that there is a need for further study in this area. The purpose of this study was to increase the limited knowledge base regarding those individuals who have experienced premarital violence. A sample of 506 college volunteers completed questionnaires which were designed to determine 1) the frequency with which dating abuse occurred and 2) whether differences existed between the premarital abuse group and the nonabuse group with regard to certain descriptive variables. These variables included self-concept, attitudes toward sex roles, and exposure to family violence. In addition, the extent to which these variables were predictive of the perceived severity of the premarital abuse was examined. T-tests were used to analyze the two groups in terms of sex role attitudes and self-concept. It was found that individuals who reported involvement in premaritally abusive relationships had lower self-concepts as compared to the nonabuse group. No significant differences were found between the groups concerning the maintenance of either liberal or traditional sex role attitudes. A chi-square analysis indicated that higher frequencies of both child abuse and marital violence were found in the abuse group than in the nonabuse group. Of these individuals who had been exposed to situations of child abuse, t-tests revealed no significant differences in perceived psychological effects between those respondents who had been involved in premarital abuse and those who had not. However, of the respondents who reported observing marital abuse, those in the premarital abuse group indicated that they experienced more severe psychological effects of the violence than did the nonabuse group. Finally, a stepwise regression was performed to determine the extent to which the three variables of self-concept, sex role attitude, and exposure to family violence, as well as a measure of physical severity, predicted the perceived psychological impact of premarital abuse Results indicated that physical severity and self concept were significant predictors jointly accounting for 18% of the variance Violence in Dating Relationships, 1993 Toward an Understanding of Abuse in the Dating Relationships of College Students Julia Anne Parisian, 1990 Victimology Burgess, 2017-12-15 Victimology explores all crimes impacting victims including child maltreatment intimate partner violence elder abuse cybercrime and hate crimes The history and theories of victimology are explored as well as definitive laws and policies strategies for intervention and future research areas The Psychology of Sexual Victimization Michele A. Paludi, 1999-09-30 A scholarly handbook focusing on variables that assist in confronting and preventing the forms of sexual victimization which include rape child abductions battering sexual harassment and incest Resources include parent and teacher training public education and awareness and psychotherapeutic techniques for families and friends of victims as well as the victims themselves All contributors to this handbook have been active in research advocacy and legislation in sexual victimization of children adolescents and adults It will be of special interest to individuals who work in the area of sexual victimization psychologists and psychiatrists social workers attorneys policymakers agency and shelter volunteers and professionals clergy and faculty and students in psychology women s studies law medicine Encyclopedia of Women in Today's World Mary Zeiss Stange, Carol K. Oyster, Jane E. Sloan, 2011-02-23 This work includes 1000 entries covering the spectrum of defining women in the contemporary world The Essentials of Lifespan Development Tara L. Kuther, 2022-05-12 Chronologically organized The Essentials of Lifespan Development examines the ways in which contexts culture society socioeconomic status home family and even community impact each stage of a person s life Violence in Teen Dating Relationships Bridgette Lynn Hernandez, 2000 The current study used a Post positivist paradigm and was quantitative in nature In addition it used a descriptive survey design which utilized self reported questionnaires The final sample included 125 students ages 18 20 in undergraduate psychology courses at a Southern California university This study attempted to explore the differences between the three types of dating violence profiles 1 victim only 2 perpetrator only and 3 mutually violent however only 37 participants completed the questionnaire which made statistical analysis impossible Nonetheless this study explored differences in relation to the demographic characteristics and five variables a gender b self esteem c severity of violence d relationship satisfaction and e acceptance of violence Therefore this study proposed that differences would be identified and used correlations to reveal any associations between the variables It was discovered that dating violence occurred among the sample with an 87.8% prevalence rate Dating Violence Wanda Spencer, 2019 The goal of this synthesis is to provide a comprehensive assessment of the literature associated with dating violence in adolescence Previous research findings on the prevalence risk factors associated with victimization and perpetration and potential health outcomes of dating violence are discussed The importance of designing developmentally and culturally competent dating violence prevention and intervention strategies in the clinical setting is emphasized This review is intended to assist health care professionals to develop interventions in their clinical settings to prevent and reduce adolescent dating violence
