Television Economics:

Television Economics Bruce M. Owen, Jack H. Beebe, Willard Graham Manning (Jr.), 1974 The Economics of Television Richard Collins, Nicholas Garnham, Gareth Locksley, 1988 How television is to be financed in the last years of this century is a question of major concern to governments broadcasters and the private sector The Economics of Television is a detailed examination of the real costs of television production in the United Kingdom and a critical analysis of those political and economic factors that impinge upon broadcasting's future The book addresses three equally pertinent questions First what is the nature of the television market Second what is happening to broadcasting costs and why Third what is the United Kingdom's role in the internationalization of television and in the international trade of television programmes The authors review the recent Peacock Committee's Report and its implications for licence fee and advertising revenues the production costs of television the internationalization of the television programme market and the overall financing of broadcasting The broadcasting environment is rapidly changing under the influence of new distribution technologies such as satellites and new ideologies such as the challenge of the private sector to public service authority Given these new influences the authors discussion highlights the imperfectly competitive character of the broadcasting market the outstanding cheapness of terrestrial broadcasting and the particular economic characteristics of television programmes and other information commodities The Economics of Television is an essential guide to the finance of television and will be required reading for anyone concerned with the future of broadcasting

The Economics, Technology and Content of Digital TV Darcy Gerbarg, 2012-12-06 As the world of television moves from analog to digital political and economic forces are being brought to bear on companies as they attempt to deal with changes occurring in their industries The impetus for the conversion from analog to digital TV comes from many quarters including the broadcasting industry the computer industry governments consumer electronics manufacturers content developers and the Internet The widespread acceptance of digital technology in both the home and the workplace account for the ready acceptance of the belief that the move to digital television is an appropriate advancement Not all authors in this volume however are believers This book is divided into four sections each dealing with one aspect of the transition from analog to digital TV broadcasting The first section presents the various technologies It establishes a structure for understanding the technologies currently in use as well as those being developed by the industries involved in the delivery of digital television Section two presents information about consumer TV viewing and includes examples of innovative experimental interactive programs Economics and financial issues are addressed from a variety of perspectives in section three Section four concludes the book with a look at the international environment and the history of digital TV globally

Global Television and Film Colin Hoskins, Stuart McFadyen, Adam Finn, 1997 This is the first non specialist introduction to the economics of the contemporary film and television business This global industry is significant both financially and culturally and the political economy of its trade is an extremely sensitive issue Are cultural goods merely entertainment goods And why does the US dominate this territory The present volume offers a systematic structured explanation of how the global markets for TV and film operate while also discussing the implications for public policy and business strategy By listing in detail the economic and cultural characteristics related to such trade the authors provide the tools necessary for the evaluation of international communications issues They also stress the uniqueness of cultural products and put forth the argument that the economic and cultural development approaches to cultural issues can be largely reconciled

The economics of television C. F. Pratten, 1970 The Economics of Television Clifford Frederick Pratten, 1970 The Economics of the Audiovisual Industry: Financing TV, Film and Web Mario La Torre, 2016-12-23 This book is open access under a CC BY licence Recent reductions in public funding for audiovisual products have led to dramatic changes in the industry The lack of interaction between the industry and capital markets has made sourcing funds for audiovisual products especially difficult This book explains why the distance between the audiovisual and financial markets exists and considers the perspective of both audiovisual companies and financial intermediaries Providing a thorough overview of the audiovisual industry in three major categories television cinema and web it analyses the financing behind each The author adapts the traditional assessment methods to include exploitation rights distribution deals and risk determinants he also proposes a pricing model for the audiovisual products demonstrating that prices and values in a industry of prototype goods do not depend solely on cost and revenue The book also includes a methodology for analysing the economics of the sector the different sales agreements between broadcasters and the distribution deals between distributors and independent producers Finally a description of the main financial products for private finance is provided as well as an explanation of how public funds can act as leverage to catalyze private resources through the use of guarantee funds In The Economics of the Audiovisual Industry the author suggests that rather than relying on subsidized public support the audiovisual industry should foster private public partnerships and market dynamics to promote an alternative funding model based on a profitable and long lasting connection between the audiovisual and financial markets The valuation model both for products and firms proposed in this book are at the basis of this new approach

Children's Television William H. Melody, Action for Children's Television, 1973 Turning young children into premature consumers has always been a potential danger of commercial television In recent years improved marketing technology has enabled the television industry to pinpoint specialized audiences at specific times Unfortunately the ability to reach a young audience has not resulted in more inventive programming in the best interests of children Instead they have been exploited by advertisers who take advantage of this increasingly lucrative market These developments have led to mounting public concern especially by consumer groups such as Action for Children's Television which petitioned the Federal Communications Commission to set guidelines to protect children from commercial exploitation This study commissioned by ACT focuses on the economic aspects of commercial children's television and their relation to FCC public policy options William Melody examines the economic characteristics of advertising practices and how they affect programming He traces the history of children's programming from television's early years when quality children's shows were used as an incentive to promote the sale of television sets to the present time of poor quality commercial laden programming that exploits the economic potential of child consumers Mr Melody demonstrates clearly that as long as advertisers control programming it will respond to their own vested interests and not to the needs of the child As a solution he suggests alternate modes of financing children's television to be implemented gradually In this way better programming will be provided without causing significant financial hardship to the broadcast industry

Economics of the Audiovisual Industry Mario La Torre,2020-10-09 This book is open access under a CC BY licence Recent reductions in public funding for audiovisual products have led to dramatic changes in the industry The lack of interaction between the industry and capital markets has made sourcing funds for audiovisual products especially difficult This book explains why the distance between the audiovisual and financial markets exists and considers the perspective of both audiovisual companies and financial intermediaries Providing a thorough overview of the audiovisual industry in three major categories television cinema and web it analyses the financing behind each The author adapts the traditional assessment methods to include exploitation rights distribution deals and risk determinants he also proposes a pricing model for the audiovisual products demonstrating that prices and values in a industry of prototype goods do not depend solely on cost and revenue The book also includes a methodology for analysing the economics of the sector the different sales agreements between broadcasters and the distribution deals between distributors and independent producers Finally a description of the main financial products for private finance is provided as well as an explanation of how public funds can act as leverage to catalyze private resources through the use of guarantee funds In The Economics of the Audiovisual Industry the author suggests that rather than relying on subsidized public support the audiovisual industry should foster private public partnerships and market dynamics to promote an alternative funding model based on a profitable and long lasting connection between the audiovisual and financial markets The valuation model both for products and firms proposed in this book are at the basis of this new approach This work was published by Saint Philip Street Press pursuant to a Creative Commons license
