States of America

Unanimous Declaration of the Thirteen united States of America

When in the course of human events it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth a separate and equal station, it is their right, it is their duty, to declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness. — That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, — That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such Principles and organizing its Powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Protection. But whenever any Form of Government is found to be destructive of these ends, the People have the Right to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such Principles and organizing its Powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Protection. Prudence, in such a Case, may dictate temporary Governments; but the ultimate Appeal is to the People. We therefore the Representatives of the united States of America, in General Congress assembled, do hereby declare that these United States are, and of Right ought to be, free and independent States; that they are absolved from all Allegiance to Great Britain; and that all political Connections with Great Britain, and all Jurisdiction, Claims, and Rights, which by said Act of Separation have been asserted to exist between the said States and Great Britain, are hereby disclaimed and renounced; and that the said States, as free and independent States, do hereby declare that they have full Power to do all those Acts and Things which Independent States may of Right do.
