

How to Talk to Your Child about Their Adoption

As an adoptive parent, you need to be prepared to talk to your child about their adoption. As children grow up and become more aware of the fact that they are adopted, they will begin to have questions that will need to be answered.

By being comfortable discussing the topic yourself and by following a few basic principles when having these discussions, you will be better equipped to satisfy your child's curiosity and offer them the support they need as they process this major life event.

Discuss adoption regularly

One of the first steps you can take to help your child process their adoption is to bring up the topic yourself regularly and to use the word "adoption" frequently when doing so. Children can begin to listen to their adoption story by the age of one. You do not need to force discussions, but mentioning their adoption whenever natural can be a good way to make the topic a comfortable and normal one in your home.
