Teacher Evaluation Arthur E. Wise, 1984 A new concern for the quality of education and of teachers is being translated into merit pay career ladder and master teacher policies that presuppose the existence of effective teacher evaluation systems School district administrators must understand the educational and organizational implications of the teacher evaluation system that they adopt because that system can define the nature of teaching and education in their schools In particular the system can either reinforce the idea of teaching as a profession or it can further deprofessionalize teaching making it less able to attract and retain talented teachers The present study focused on the actual operation of teacher evaluation procedures in school systems It examined not only the instruments and procedures but also the implementation process and the organizational contexts within which they operate This approach enabled the authors to observe whether and how teacher evaluation results are used by the organization It also indicated the broader organizational conditions needed to initiate and sustain effective teacher evaluation practices

Evaluating Teachers Stephen Jackson, Casey Remer, 2014 Until recently states focused on ensuring the presence of a highly qualified teacher in every classroom Under the 2001 reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act ESEA known as No Child Left Behind NCLB this title described a teacher holding at least a bachelor s degree and the appropriate state license and demonstrating subject matter competency Research has shown that these input measures do little to explain differences in student performance Thus in recent years the conversation has shifted to a focus on outputs how effective a teacher is at improving student achievement Knowing how well or how poorly educators are performing is critical to drive improvement strategies for individual teachers schools districts and states and to inform accountability systems High quality teacher evaluation data can also be used to inform policies across the education system including measuring the effectiveness of teacher preparation programs informing performance based compensation ensuring students have equal access to highly effective teachers and identifying professional development needs The need for quality data on teacher performance is clear and the reform of teacher evaluation systems must be considered in the context of other activities designed to improve educator effectiveness This issue of re VISION part of a special series on teacher effectiveness examines the evolution of teacher evaluation systems and the most commonly used evaluation measures and offers considerations for policymakers who are examining teacher evaluation in their states A glossary of common student achievement measures is provided For Part 1 of this series see

Evaluating Teachers Brown Center on Education Policy. Task Group on Teacher Quality, Steven Glazerman, Susanna Loeb, Daniel D. Goldhaber, Stephen Raudenbush, Grover J. Whitehurst, Brookings Institution. Brown Center on Education Policy, 2010 The evaluation of teachers based on the contribution they make to the learning of their students value added is an increasingly popular but controversial education reform policy We highlight and try to clarify four areas of confusion about value added The first is between value added information and the uses to which it can be put One can for example be in favor of an evaluation system that includes value added information without endorsing the release to the public of value added data on individual teachers The second is between the consequences for teachers vs those for students of classifying and misclassifying teachers as effective or ineffective the interests of students are not always perfectly congruent with those of teachers The third is between the reliability of value added measures of teacher performance and the standards for evaluations in other fields value added scores for individual teachers turn out to be about as reliable as performance assessments used elsewhere for high stakes decisions The fourth is between the reliability of teacher evaluation systems that include value added vs those that do not ignoring value added typically lowers the reliability of personnel decisions about teachers We conclude that value added data has an important role to play in teacher evaluation systems but that there is much to be learned about how best to use value added information in human resource decisions

Linking Teacher Evaluation and Student Learning Pamela D. Tucker, James H. Stronge, 2005-04-15 In Linking Teacher Evaluation and Student Learning researchers Pamela D Tucker and James H Stronge show that including measures of student achievement in teacher evaluations can help schools focus their efforts to meet higher standards You'll see how four school systems have built such measures into their evaluation programs in these distinct ways Documenting how desired learning outcomes translated into actual student learning Tracking progress on key content standards Setting annual quantifiable goals for students academic progress Analyzing changes in students achievement test scores The authors explore the strengths of each approach offer insights from teachers and administrators and describe practical ways to incorporate similar measures of student learning into your own evaluation program Detailed appendixes provide hands on tools and resources to help you adapt these approaches to your school s particular needs For any school that is working to meet higher standards linking teacher evaluation to measures of student learning is a powerful way to refocus professional development and improve student achievement

EDUCATION Educational Policy Reform General A Century's Growth in Teacher Evaluation in the United States Clara Hamilton Peterson, 1982

Rethinking Teacher Evaluation in Chicago Lauren Sartain, Sara Ray Stoelinga, Eric R.

Brown, Stuart Luppescu, 2011-11-18 Teacher evaluation is arguably the hottest issue in education right now. Because of Race to the Top, many states and districts around the country are designing and implementing new teacher evaluation systems that for the first time ever evaluate teachers based on how much their students learn. However, there is limited research on how to build an evaluation system centered on classroom observations that can distinguish between effective and ineffective teaching. This report from the University of Chicago Consortium on School Research focuses on Chicago but the lessons learned have significant applicability to districts across the country. The report is one of the first to provide research-based evidence showing that new teacher observation tools when accompanied by thoughtful evaluation systems and professional development can effectively measure teacher effectiveness and provide teachers with feedback on the factors that matter for improving student learning. This is especially relevant for those districts that are implementing the Charlotte Danielson Framework for Teaching including Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Idaho, Illinois, New Jersey, New York, South Dakota, Washington, Los Angeles, and Pittsburgh.

Teacher Self-Evaluation Lya Kremer-Hayon, 1993-08-31 In response to the emerging need to develop teachers as professionals who evaluate their own work, this book presents the foundations of self-evaluation as well as self-evaluation models and tools that are likely to help educational practitioners to evaluate their own teaching and thus raise the level of their professional functioning. The book is intended to serve several groups: student teachers whose socialization into the teaching profession should include the perception of self-evaluation as an inherent part of teaching; the student teachers' supervisors who are expected to help in developing the knowledge and skills that are needed for purposes of self-evaluation; and teachers, school principals, and university instructors in departments of teacher education who are interested in teachers' growth and in the development of teaching as a profession.
