

Functionality (style)

When our code is working as expected, we have good functionality— things are functional. Good style includes readability, solid formatting, decomposition, commenting, and following Python conventions. Style is an important, learned art.

Abstraction

Abstraction is when the details are taken out of a task and we can just focus on the task itself. Say you make a "turn bit around" helper function composed of two left turns. When it's called, you think of the turn as one simple action.

Variable (value)

A variable is something that stores and serves as a placeholder for a value. Sometimes, variables represent special values like `bit` which comes with its own pack of functions!

Computer Science (algorithms)

Computer Science is the study of computers. Sometimes it involves coding, sometimes it involves the math and theory behind computing systems. Computer Science, or CS as we call it here, is vast.

Some CS

Vocabulary

We hear the words, but what do they mean?

A Supplementary Guide...

Programming (coding)

Programming is the whole process of creating and managing programs. This involves coding, or writing lines of code, in addition to testing, debugging, etc.

Program (compile, run)

In Pycharm, we run more programs. A program is a set of instructions we can compile and run. Compiling code involves translating it into the computer's true language. During this process, the computer can catch additional errors before actually running the code line by line.

File

We will see files in Pycharm. There are different kinds of files, like `.txt`, `.png`, `.js`, etc. In `.py` files, or Python files, we can write our Python code and eventually run it.

Terminal

We will see the terminal in Pycharm; this is a "command center" where we can run whole programs in our files..
